S. No. 417

EXPLANATORY NOTE

The 1987 Constitution has very wisely given the highest priority to the protection and promotion of the rights of indigenous cultural communities to ensure their economic, social and cultural well-being.

Thus, in its declaration of principles and state policies, the Constitution in Article II, Section 22, provides that "(t)he State recognizes and promotes the rights of indigenous cultural communities within the framework of national unity and development." In its article on the national economy and patrimony, the Constitution in Article XII, Section 5 provides that "the State x x x shall protect the rights of indigenous cultural communities to their ancestral lands" and expressly authorizes Congress to provide "for the applicability of the customary laws governing property rights or relations in determining the ownership and extent of ancestral domain." In its provisions on education, science and technology, arts, culture, and sports, the Article XIV, Section 17 of the Constitution provides that "(t)he State shall recognize, respect and protect the rights of indigenous cultural communities to preserve and develop their cultures, traditions and institutions" and "shall consider their rights in the formulation of national plans and policies."

In light of the above provisions, it is imperative that the government should adopt policies and programs for indigenous cultural communities. But to ensure that these policies and programs are based on facts and an enlightened judgment, it is necessary to have a continuing in-depth study of the indigenous cultural communities, who should also participate in such study. This is the reason for the proposed creation of a center for studies on indigenous cultural communities.

In view of the foregoing considerations, the approval of this bill is earnestly requested.
